Abstract
This study focuses on how the Taiwan enterprises control it’s Mainland subsidiaries by way of financial affairs. From the literature review, we could get the definition of pass the third place for investment, fund flows, government regulation, and financial plan, and then the research structure is set up. Qualitative research method is adopted, and the conclusions are as follows:
1.Since there is no diplomatic relation between Taiwan and China, passing the third place for investment is the best solution for Taiwan business.
2.With the growing competitive business environment, how to protect the core competence of Taiwan traditional business must rely on the collaboration among the government and business.
3.Taiwan business could make use of the operation plan to control subsidiary. By this rigorous way, business could control the subsidiary effectively.
4.There are many problems between Taiwan and China, such as the politics, tax, manpower, environment, etc. To survive in the international market, combining the core competences with the low-cost advantage of China will be a very important issue for Taiwan traditional enterprises.
