Abstract
The performance in executing the anti-corruption policy is usually based on the official statistics. However, the official statistics are unable to truly reflect the performance of government ethics authorities. This research aims at Tainan city government and its affiliated organizations. The questionnaire is designed for public servants in Tainan city government and its affiliated organizations and to study the function of the office of government ethics, the morality of the government ethics servants and the performance in executing anti-corruption. The results show that the main functions of government ethics authorities are to prevent the corruption and to provide services instead of interventions.
